The past and present of education in Minami-Majino

Rokuro Sahara

As a member of the Keio Society for the Study of Rural Communities, I undertook to investigate the past and present of educational conditions in and about Minami-Majino, a small forming village recently annexed to the city of Suwa, Nagano Prefecture. For this purpose, I adopted the following seven procedures:

(1) to collect and look through as many old documents and other materials as possible,

(2) to conduct interviews with the old-timers in the village in order to hear their views on the educational conditions in the past,

(3) to conduct interviews with some parents of school children and leaders of the P.T.A. in order to learn about the present state of affairs of education,

(4) to have a conference with teachers of the elementary and junior high schools to discuss some problems of school education,

(5) to investigate school children's attitudes toward their families, school, village and so on, by means of a questionnaire method,

(6) to have a meeting with some members of the Board of Education to hear from them their plans of administration concerning the school and the social education of the city,

(7) to conduct interviews with some leaders of Young Men's Association, Women's Society, Public Hall and Nursery School in order to know their activities in the social education.

Referring to the outcome of my investigation, I gave, in these papers, a report on (a) the existing conditions of Suwa-Nishi Junior High School and Konami Elementary School in Minami-Majino, (b) historic facts of terakoyas, old private schools, before the Meiji era and elementary schools in the early days of the Meiji era in and about Minami-Majino.
