Input-Output Analysis (1)

-Basic Theoretical Formulations-

by Masao Fukuoka

This series of papers has been designed as an attempt of presenting the essentials of some mutually related subjects which are of much interest in recent economic discussions. They are: Input-Output Analysis, Linear Programming and the Theory of Games. To set about this program, we shall summarize the Leontief Input-Output System in the first three papers. The first one, which is published in this issue, deals with its basic aspects, containing the formulation of the real quantity system and its dual price system, the statistical money-flow measurement, and the problem of consolidation. A brief summary of the substitutability problem will also be included.

British Labour Movement in the 1830's

-Introductory Study to the History of the Labour Party-

by Kanae Iida

The present study covers the British labour movements during the age of the Chartists between the years 1830 and 1840. By an analysis of the Chartist's miserable conditions of living, the writer infers that their movements were an inevitability of the historical and social environment of the time. The period marked the end of Owenism and the rise of militant trade unionism which retained its influence up to the later establishment of the Labour Party.
