The report focuses on the feasibility and safety of percutaneous cryoablation of lung tumors. The study suggests that this treatment is effective and safe, especially in cases where surgery is not feasible or safe. The results are promising, and the research team plans to continue investigating this novel treatment option.